As a twelve-year old, I often walked past the church where Ina Mae Breuner played the hymns gospel-style for her Daddy's Sunday service. Oh, how she could play that old upright - and she didn't even take lessons! Their service started thirty minutes after ours, so If I timed it right, I'd pass by as they sang the last hymn. I'd stand outside and pretend to study the stained-glass window, a single wide Gothic arch filled with a barefoot Jesus the Good Shepherd, blue and red robe over one shoulder and crook in hand, surrounded by his jigsaw-puzzle sheep, and listen to Ina Mae's playing. You couldn't be a hymn and not be vanquished by Ina Mae. Any hymns hiding inside that old piano, when she put her fingers on the keyboard, they had to come out with their hands in the air. How did she do that? Once I climbed the creaky wooden steps and peeked through the gap in the doors. If the gap had been any wider the pastor would have seen my whole face, crooked braids and all, instead of just one bugged-out eye. Wished I could play like that!

Dear Members and Friends,

Sometimes life does scare us. Sometimes we feel that the world is out of joint, that those in charge have no clue how to fix things, and that evil is winning. But then along comes Easter, to remind us that, despite all the evidence to the contrary, our God is still in charge.

In the early 1970s, a certain theological seminary held a conference on the future. Alvin Toffler's book, Future Shock, was all the rage, and an impressive group of scholars was assembled to "do futuring." They gave well-documented addresses, speculating about the sweeping changes moving toward us in education, economics, community life, and technology. They envisioned the future and described it in dazzling detail. The closing address was given by the president of the seminary, who said in essence, "I am only a theologian, and I have no idea what shape the future will take. The only thing I do know is that the future will belong to a merciful God." Years later when this seminary president retired, he was cleaning out his office and ran across the files from the conference. He reread the papers, reviewing now with hindsight all of the brave predictions of the future. "You know," he said, "I was the only one who was right!"

May you continue to enjoy this Easter Season.

See you in church,

William B. Rolland
